TECHNOLOGICAL INNOVATION AND ACTIVE

PHA

WHAT ARE THEY

They are chemical exfoliants from the alpha hydroxy acid family (AHA). They do not cause photosensitization and are therefore also defined as "friends of sensitive skin". The most common are LACTOBIONIC acid and GLUCONOLACTONE.

HOW THEY WORK

1. Exfoliate dead skin cells;
2. They help the ingredients of the products to penetrate deeper, increasing their effectiveness;
3. Uniform the complexion;
4. They act against glycation, the process that occurs when digested sugar permanently attaches itself to collagen in the skin and weakens it.

PLUS

Being larger molecules than alpha hydroxy acids, they penetrate the skin to a lesser extent, slower and less deeply

- They are therefore ideal for all skin types, especially the most sensitive ones
- They are more delicate than glycolic acid and lactic acid
- They do not burn and do not sting (by virtue of the slower absorption)
- They are perfect for those with dry skin thanks to their humectant power

LACTOBIONIC ACID

It derives from the oxidation of lactose. Like the other AHAs, it is effective in regulating the keratinization process, promoting skin renewal and cell renewal, improving the appearance of the skin and making it radiant and uniform. It is a very hygroscopic molecule and has a strong skin moisturizing property. It inhibits the formation of free radicals, carrying out a significant antioxidant activity. Finally, it prevents and reduces damage related to sun exposure (photoaging) and reduces the melanin index of the skin, also exerting a slight lightening effect.

GLUCONOLACTONE

Gluconolactone is obtained by fermentation from renewable plant sources, starting from the glucose contained in them. It has a strong hygroscopic and long-term moisturizing power thanks to the presence of numerous hydroxyl groups. Applied to the skin, it promotes exfoliation and cell renewal, modulating the keratinization process. It also has good antioxidant and restoring properties of the damaged skin barrier.

ASCORBIC ACID

WHAT IS IT

Vitamin with high antioxidant power capable of counteracting the action of free radicals, slowing down skin aging. It also acts on the relaxation of the tissue by stimulating the skin to produce the right amount of collagen. In addition, by carrying out a slightly exfoliating action, Vitamin C improves the complexion by giving skin uniformity.
